Treatment for all medical conditions related to infertility

If you have fibroids, endometriosis or polycystic ovary syndrome, our reproductive endocrinologists will recommend the appropriate treatment to decrease your pain and improve your fertility.

We can also help you experience relief if you have troublesome symptoms during the hormonal transition to menopause.

Fertility preservation

Individuals and couples may choose to freeze their embryos, eggs or sperm in order to attempt pregnancy at a later date.

Comprehensive stress reduction program

Fertility diagnosis and treatment is often emotionally draining. To address this stress, our onsite PhD Clinical Psychologist provides individual and couples therapy, as well as monthly support groups to decrease the sense of isolation. She also offers decision-making consultations if you need support deciding between multiple pathways or if you and your partner are not yet in agreement about next treatment steps.

Third party reproduction

• Egg/sperm donation

For people seeking a donor, our specialists will work with them according to their preferences for an anonymous or directed donation – whether they prefer to receive eggs or sperm from someone they don't know or have identified a donor who will be a part of their family planning.

Through Duke Fertility Center's donor egg program, individuals or couples who need a donor egg because of age or other factors can arrange to have a friend or relative be their egg donor, or apply to be matched with someone from the local area who has volunteered to be an anonymous egg donor.

• Gestational carrier program

For people who want to work with a gestational carrier who delivers a child for them, Duke Fertility Center will assist with the medical and psychological screening process to verify if a gestational carrier is appropriate and well-prepared for this experience. Assistance is available to help with contacting local legal resources to handle all the appropriate legal arrangements.
